Finity Daybell was born March 14, 1815, at Lincolnshire, England. Married Mary Draper March 10, 1841, at Falkingham, England. She was born January 6, 1820 at Lincolnshire, England. Both children of farmers. Finity died October 25, 1897 and Mary died September 2, 1899.

Finity and Mary Daybell were converts to the LDS Church and emigrated to the United States in 1864, arriving at Charleston December 24, 1864. The oldest son, Robert, remained in England to be married and came to America two years later. While crossing the plains near the Platte River in Wyoming, Robert and a companion went out to hunt game and he was never seen nor heard of again. He left a young wife and baby to come to Salt Lake alone.

At Charleston they settled on 160 acres which had to be cleared for farming. They were confronted with many hardships. On one occasion, they were forced to move to Heber City for protection against the Indians, who stole and killed their animals.

1025

Mary was an ardent Relief Society worker for many years and was called to be a counselor to Emma Brown the first president of the Wasatch Stake Relief Society. She worked in this capacity for 16 years. They were instrumental in the work of building roads, bridges and homes in the settling of Wasatch County.

They were the parents of eight children who lived and three who died in England.

Robert, their oldest son, married Agnes Bancroft in England and was lost while crossing the plains. He had two daughters, Mary Hannah Daybell who married George Price and Kate Daybell who married Levi Snow.

George Daybell (first) died in infancy.

Ann Daybell, who married William Webster before leaving England, came to America and settled in Charleston.

Susan Daybell came with her parents to America as a young girl. She married John Pollard and then after his death married George Carlile. She had no children.

Sarah Daybell married George Thomas Giles and they were the parents of 13 children.

George Daybell (second) married Sarah Ann Carlile and they had four sons. He was a successful farmer until his death when he was struck with lightning.

Elizabeth Daybell married Franklin Giles. They had no children.

William Daybell, the youngest son, came to America at the age of six with the other children. He married Annie Price and was a successful farmer, and active in Church and civic affairs. He and his wife had 11 children.
